Description

Spices and Herbs are plant-based ingredients used to flavor, season, and enhance the taste of food and beverages. Spices are aromatic substances derived from various parts of plants, such as seeds, bark, roots, fruits, or flowers. They are typically dried and ground into powder or used whole. Spices are known for their intense flavors, which can range from sweet and floral to pungent and spicy. They are used to season and add depth to dishes, often contributing to the overall taste profile of a recipe. Common examples of spices include cinnamon, cumin, cloves, ginger, and paprika. Herbs are the leaves of herbaceous plants, which may be fresh or dried, and are valued for their aromatic and flavorful qualities. Unlike spices, which are often derived from woody or hard parts of plants, herbs are primarily harvested from the soft, leafy parts. Herbs can have subtle to robust flavors, ranging from grassy and citrusy to earthy and minty. They are used to add freshness, brightness, and herbal notes to dishes. Common examples of herbs include basil, parsley, rosemary, thyme, and cilantro.
